

Inside / Out GALLERY

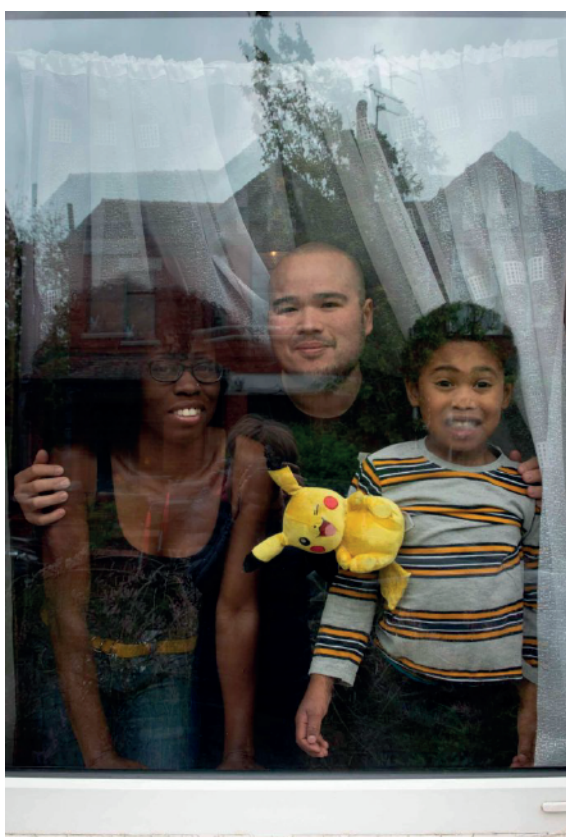

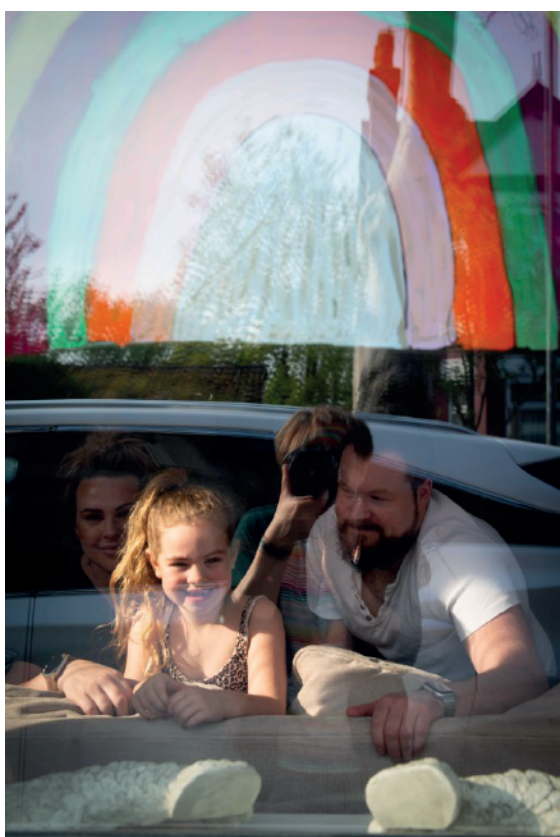

'We are interested in life of the outside of school building.

A school without walls comes to mind when we see windows - looking into homes and out of an empty school. Perhaps the boundaries between in / outside of school are not as hard as we think.

We ask, how do framing devices (windows, picture frames, doorways, institutions, curricula etc) help us to focus in a busy chaotic world whilst simultaneously limiting what we see and shaping how we see it?

What happens when we try to look differently through those frames, when things are turned inside out? '
